NORMAN WATKINS
Nominated for House

The minority report which favored a compromise by permitting the delegates to vote by secret ballot in each precinct, the chairman of the delegation to present the result, and that no challenge of the results of any vote of the precinct delegation as announced by the chairman be allowed unless presented by a majority of such delegates. After presenting the minority report Wise moved that it be adopted. George W. Smith spoke in favor of the minority report, declaring that only cowards favored a secret ballot.

Andrews for Majority.

Lorrin Andrews spoke for the majority report. He said that the proposition advanced by Wise was neither an open ballot nor a secret ballot, but a trading ballot. He declared that it was impossible for many of the delegates to vote as they felt save with a secret ballot and made the usual plea of bread and butter being at stake.

Wise replied in defense of the minority, speaking in two languages. When he ended, there were calls for the question and the chairman put the vote viva voce, as to whether the minority report should be adopted.

The Noes seemed to have it by a large majority, but Wise called for a division and when the roll call was over the minority report had been adopted to the tune of 191 to 135. Lorrin Andrews was beaten in another attempt to gain control of the party, and Kuhio candidates had either abandoned all pretensions to office or were scurrying around trying to make deals in the camp of the enemy.

The platform was in a fair way of being adopted without much consideration had not John Wise started a searching inquisition into its features by moving that a clause relating to civil service for firemen and policemen be stricken out. This precipitated a general debate and before it ended, the pruning knife had been freely used.

The call for the nominations of candidates for supervisors caught the delegates mixed up in gesticulating knots all over the hall and engaged in playing all the arts covered by the words, pleading, cajoling and serenading.

Lost And resigned.

The candidates whose only hope of success had depended on the secret ballot were ails of meek and pathetic resignation and were hoping against hope that something might happen at the last minute that would toss them into the arena on an uncontrollable wave of popular demand. But there was no William Jennings Bryan there, to pull the bait stuff and the plans of the opposition were too well laid. E. H. Paris of E. O. Hall & Son's was named candidate at the last moment and to show how perfectly the machine worked, slid in with 208 votes simply because he had the right kind of endorsement. David Notley another added starter whom no one appeared to know, jumped into the open and ran like a scared wolf crossing the line with 252 votes behind him. He too had the proper endorsers. C. G. Bartlett, the brewery candidate was high man with a total of 291 votes to his credit. Arnold, one of the present incumbents won re-nomination on his record. Carlos Long another added starter got by and so did Andrew Cox and J. B. Enos.

Those who fell by the wayside were Joe Maguire, Dan Logan, A. Fernandez, M. C. Amana, Frank Kruger, J. C. Quinn, William Abia, Edward Fogarty, William Aylett and Emil Berndt.

Kruger Light Hearted.

Outside of the winners Kruger seemed to be the only man pleased at the result. "I had withdrawn," he said, "but the convention didn't know it and I was afraid they might nominate me anyhow. However I appreciate the 27 votes I received and shall now retire to my jewelry store where I shall be better off than in the fierce light that beats upon a supervisor."

When the smoke of battle had lifted and the defeated candidates had joined mournful Joel Cohen on the sidewalk, the delegates had a respite from strife in nominating the following who had no opposition—David Kalanokalani for county clerk, James Bicknell for auditor, J. W. Cathcart for county attorney and Robert Parker for Sheriff.

Just before the nominations for Mayor were called, a desperate attempt was made by those interested to induce Robert Shingle to change his mind again and come out as a candidate. The plot was to have his name sprung suddenly on the floor of the convention in the belief that the delegates would be swept off their feet and name him by acclamation.

Breckons Hears Scheme.

Breckons heard of the scheme and sent for Shingle so that the latter could give his personal assurance that he would not enter the race, district with a total of 220 votes. Castro and Achil were the losers with a vote of 95 respectively.

The selection of representatives marked the conclusion of the burial rites for the Kaimuki precinct, which with 216 voters on the rolls failed to get a mention. The aforesaid interment was represented by the wailing out of the candidates of Towse and Affonso, who aspired to the house from that precinct.

The nomination of deputy sheriffs was the last act on the program, adjournment being taken after midnight.

After the selection of the county central committee, that body met and elected the following officers: Chairman, B. von Damm, Secretary, John H. Wise, Treasurer, Albert Waterhouse.

INTERESTING POINTS IN CONVENTION

Following the appointment of committees at the morning session, the convention adjourned until 2:30 o'clock, when it reassembled to hear the various reports from the committees. The first, that on credentials, was received and adopted without opposition, it being noted that there were 32 delegates represented by proxies, one of which, the eleventh of the Fourth, John Wise carried in his vest pocket, neither of the delegates being present.

When the call was made for the report of the committee on rules, there was a buckling up of belts under tension, for here was to be the test, the adoption of the majority report for the secret ballot meaning a victory for the Kuhio ticket, and that of the minority by John Wise, that there would be a vast shifting of combinations in the interests of the so-called business men's ticket.

Lorrin Andrews presented the majority report favoring the secret ballot without comment. John Wise read a general debate and before it ended,
